Exhibitor list continues to grow

CHARLOTTE, NC – Classic Industries, one of the world's largest distributors of restoration, performance and original automotive parts and accessories, will showcase its extensive business at the inaugural High Performance Expo (HPX) in June 2025.

"Classic Industries is excited to exhibit at the inaugural 2025 High Performance Expo because we've been looking for a new breed of aftermarket show that targets both the automotive aftermarket as well as the auto enthusiast," said Classic Industries CEO Jeff Leonard. "Charlotte, the epicenter of the motorsports community, is the ideal location for this show and for companies looking for an advantage in the competitive automotive aftermarket."

Originally founded in 1976, Classic Industries made its name selling small, hard-to-find items for the restoration of early Chevrolet Camaro models from a small facility in Palm Springs, CA. The Classic Industries headquarters, located in Huntington Beach, CA, now features a retail showroom, corporate offices, parts production, complete call center, shipping center, and multiple warehouses for the largest inventory of parts and accessories in the restoration and performance industry.

With multiple warehouses stocked full of Chevrolet, Buick, Oldsmobile, Pontiac, Chrysler, Plymouth, Dodge, Ford, Lincoln, and Mercury parts, Classic Industries has provided over a million customers with parts and accessories they have needed to restore their vehicles. For over four decades, Classic Industries' comprehensive, full-color catalogs have been known for their accurate descriptions and helpful listings of restoration and performance parts. Their convenient, easy-to-use website lists thousands of products to cover the restoration of hundreds of classic American-made car and truck models.

"Classic Industries is widely known as one of the world's largest sources of auto restoration and performance parts and accessories, so we are thrilled for them to join the growing list of industry leaders committed to exhibit at HPX 2025," said Dana Teague, general manager of HPX 2025.
